

David Steinwender, MSc studied Environmental System Sciences with Geography at the University of Graz – additionally he attended courses at the University for Life Sciences in Vienna and Graz University of Technology. His bachelor thesis dealt with the commons in regard to community gardening, his master thesis investigated the potential of transition (town) initiatives in Austria for an aspired social ecological transformation. He was founder of forum n as an Austria-wide students network for sustainability among other civil society organizations he was / is engaged in. His research focus is sustainable food provision and food justice and regenerative urban and regional development. At the STS-Unit he is engaged with climate neutral universities. He also works at the Interdisciplinary Research Centre for Technology, Work and Culture. He is also lecturer at the University of Graz.

Main fields of research

Food Justice, Climate Neutrality, Civic Engagement