

Matthias Duller studied sociology (BA 2009) and Southeast European history (MA 2011) in Graz, Cluj-Napoca, and Zadar, and received his PhD in sociology from the University of Graz in 2017. Since 2012 he has worked in several research projects on Cold War social science in the sociology department in Graz where he has also taught courses on the history of sociology, social studies of science, sociological theory and empirical social research. After his graduation, he held a postdoc positions in Graz, at the Center for Advanced Study Sofia (2018), and the Institute for Advanced Study at Central European University in Budapest (2018-19). Matthias's research focuses on the political conditions of the social sciences in Eastern Europe under communist rule and involves East-West comparisons and transnational contacts and influences across the Iron Curtain. He authored and co-authored articles mainly on the historical sociology of the social sciences that were published in journals such as History of the Human Sciences and European Societies or as book chapters with Cambridge UP, CEU Press, and others. He is a guest editor of a special issue of Stan Rzeczy on sociology under socialism (with M. Pawlak) and a co-editor (with C. Fleck and V. Karády) of Shaping Human Science Disciplines: Institutional Developments in Europe and Beyond (Palgrave Macmillan, 2018).
